Predicts Dulles Won't Last

Kellis Says Director of CIA Kept Temporarily to Assure Continuity

Defeated congressional candidate James G. Kellis today predicted that Allen W. Dulles won't remain as director of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA).

A critic of Dulles during his campaign to win the 18th Congressional District (Oakland County) seat, Kellis, of Berkley, said President-Elect John F. Kennedy probably was retaining Dulles for the time being to assure continuity of the important office.

"I believe by next summer he will be replaced," Kellis said.

In his first announcement of appointments since being elected Tuesday, Kennedy said Dulles and J. Edgar Hoover would remain in their present positions, the latter as FBI director.

IKE'S MAN — Wilton B. Persons, chief of President Eisenhower's White House staff, will be available for meetings with Clark Clifford, liaison man for President-Elect Kennedy, in connection with the transition of the presidency.

SILENT ON REPLACEMENT

Kellis, still resting up after the vigorous campaign which saw him drop the election to incumbent Republican Congressman William S. Broomfield by nearly 33,000 votes, wouldn't forecast who would replace Dulles.

He said he wouldn't be a candidate, although he served in the CIA and the old Office of Strategic Services, predecessor of the CIA.

Kellis retired from the Air Force as a colonel in May to run for office.

He campaigned on grounds that the nation's security and foreign policy had been hindered under Dulles' leadership and the Eisenhower administration.

"I still think that Allen Dulles is no good and I'm going to fight him," Kellis said.

He said three months ago he had been approached in Washington by a member of the Democratic National Committee on whether he would like the job.

'DIDN'T CARE FOR IT'

"I told him that I didn't care for it," Kellis said.

A trip to Washington next week was still planned, Kellis said, "to talk over how the election went" and to follow up his doctoral thesis submitted to Georgetown University.

He said he wasn't too surprised to hear of Dulles' retention in office.

"This is one of those jobs you can't make a change in overnight," Kellis said.

A likely successor to Dulles is Charles Brown, a partner in the New York investment firm of J. H. Whitney and once chief of operations for the CIA, a position Kellis held himself, Kellis said.
